Biography:

Dr. Justin J. Boseck earned his master’s degree in school psychology and doctorate with an emphasis in clinical neuropsychology from Ball State University. He then went on to complete internship and residencies at the Center for Neurological and Neurodevelopmental Health in Gibbsboro, New Jersey and Trinity Health hospital in Minot, North Dakota. These experiences focused on neurodevelopmental disorders, acquired brain injuries, and psychiatric illnesses in children, adolescents, and adults.

Dr. Boseck is a licensed psychologist, Board-Certified Pediatric Neuropsychologist, Certified Brain Injury Specialist, and Nationally Certified School Psychologist. He works clinically at Pediatric Partners Neurobehavioral Health (NBH) in Fargo, North Dakota. His clinical work emphasizes assessment in the areas of neurodevelopmental, acquired, and psychiatric disorders including Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder, brain injury, Autism Spectrum Disorder, Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder, learning disorders, and mood/behavioral dysregulation disorders. He is also the chief of psychology at NBH supervising and collaborating with licensed psychologists and mental health therapists.

In addition to his clinical work, Dr. Boseck is the executive director of the non-profit organization, FASnD, which focuses on raising awareness of Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder. He is also an adjunct professor in the psychology department at North Dakota State University.

Dr. Boseck’s personal time revolves around the most important people in his life including his wife (Suzy) and children (Payten and Bryden). They most enjoy spending their time with extended family, being outdoors, and doing ‘nothing’ together because, as the great Winnie the Pooh said, “Doing nothing often leads to the very best of something.”
